I am not particularly keen on watching TV, as in my opinion, not many TV programmes are worth watching but unfortunately the good ones end very late at night. As I often have to get up very early I prefer not to watch those films which finish very late, however I sometimes watch documentaries at nights.

"Operación Triunfo" and "Mira quien baila" are some of the programmes that I usually watch. They both have something in common: they are both about acquiring artistic skills through effort and hard work. The difference between these programmes is the way they end. In the first programme the winners donate the prize money to a NGO. In the second programme the winners are offered a recording contract.

In conclusion, these programmes are family orientated. The presenters and contestants in both programmes are friendly and funny, so enjoyment is guaranteed. I really enjoy watching the dancing and listening to the songs.

Every year my family comes together to celebrate Christmas. This is a very important moment because all of us see each other and we laugh and talk so much.

The fact that we don’t usually celebrate other parties like Christmas makes this moment extraordinary. In comparison with birthday parties, Christmas (thanks to my grandmother whom we miss so much) is a special moment when we celebrate the wonderful family we are.

Many people think that this time of the year is sad for them for many reasons. I really understand why they think that because I have been thinking that way for many years since my grandma died, but now I understand that all of us are together, even she!
