Question 1

- a) FALSE: “It was the perfect pub, but it didn’t exist since the ideal boozier lived only in Orwell’s imagination”
- b) FALSE: “Yes, the death of the great British pub has long been predicted, with some losses since the 1900s”

Question 2

En este ejercicio se proponen soluciones válidas, pero no son las únicas posibles

- a) There are several reasons for pub closures. Mention four. The taxes are now more expensive and for this reason they are less attractive for people and day by day people change their customs. In addition to this, smoking in pubs is forbidden and stores offer cheap alcohol and that way people tend to stay at home.
- b) Why is the decline of pubs affecting British people’s feelings? British people feel like home in pubs, surrounded by people and feeling that they are with friends. Since the decline of the pubs, these feelings are changing and they are not as happy as they were before.

Personally, I think that this is a very controversial issue. I know a lot of people with different opinions about this topic and it is very difficult to get an agreement.

On the one hand, some people consider that we are in a big world and we are making a great culture with the globalization and for this reason, they think it is not important to preserve customs and flags. We have to learn common things, like English language, because it is a link between people and this is far more important than any other thing.

On the other hand, other people say that every monument, every language and the traditions must be respected, because they are an important part of our cultural heritage. They don’t agree with the global world, because they feel that we lose our identity.

To sum up, I have to admit that maybe the key is keeping a balance between preserving our cultures and living in a big global world.

Question 1

a) FALSE: “That first burger, which was financed by a co-founder of Google, was tasted live in London back in 2013”

b) TRUE: “However, large-scale production with a price equal to regular meat will take much longer”

Question 2

En este ejercicio se proponen soluciones válidas, pero no son las únicas posibles

a) Explain how tissue engineering may help biomedical research. It can help people to live longer, because they will be able to fix organs or create new ones, that way we could be “repaired” and we will live more and more.

b) What may be the effects of large-scale cultured meat production on global warming? The effects will be positive, some of them will be very important, for instance: the reduction of the use of petrol or gas, the fields will be wilder without so many animals eating there, and the negative gases that animals produce will be reduced too.

First of all, I have to admit that eating healthy and lab made food sounds really interesting. If it is good for us and it tastes great it is difficult to say a disadvantage. Secondly, our world is overpopulated and being able to feed the world artificially could solve a lot of problems.

However, it is hard to think that we will never eat natural food again, and it just sounds insane. The world is changing every minute and technology makes great developments every day. Thinking about this issue years ago was completely impossible, and nowadays it is almost a reality.

To sum up, it is unbelievable to think about a world without natural food. When I think about it, it comes to my mind as a science fiction film, but... who knows the future will bring?
