It is said that parents are trying to learn how new technologies work in order to watch what their children do or say with their friends on internet but, is that something which I totally agree with?

On the one hand, I understand why parents feel the necessity of controlling what their children are doing because Internet is something that could be very dangerous, so I think that adult people, who know and have more experience than us with this digital world, are very useful and might save teens of any bad choice. On the other hand, I think that it should not be very excessive because parents may lose confidence and to create a situation contrary to what they are trying to achieve. From my point of view, I think that controlling or “spying” could be good, but always trying to be careful and educate children to avoid surprises in the future.

In conclusion, parents must teach their children the danger of internet and educate them to know what they should do and what not.

Nowadays, everybody lives in a world where every detail is important to make your own personality and, how you smell is a very important detail.

Perfume ads are very important for people because thanks to it people know if that perfume is good for children, adults or even the perfect age to use it. Experts know what kind of people will buy their products perfectly, because they pay a lot of money to famous people trying to catch people like me because “our idols” use those perfumes and we want to look like them. Actors, singers, models... it seems that every thing is based on what these kind of people use, and every body wants to smell better than others but, are we choosing it because we love how it smells or only because we liked the advert? I do not know, but what I really know is that we should wear that one whose smell is perfect for us and not for the others!
